Put to the Test.

Ruin had overtaken him. Crushed and humiliated he stood before the woman he loved and awaited his fate

"Speak," he groaned; "I am prepared for the worst.

Moving swiftly across the room, she laid her hand tenderly upon his shoulder. His being thrilled with renewed courage.

"Then you have trust in me?" be eagerly exclaimed.

She smiled.

"Can you doubt me?" she asked in sweet reproach. "When you came to me and told me you had caught 47 brook trout, each of a weight of one pound and upward, I believed you. Why, then, should you question me now?"

Supported by her love he laughed the world to scorn.-Detroit Tribune.

What a Sweet Mummy!

When Fred Funston went on the Death valley expedition two or three years ago, two of his university girl friends were talking about him. "Where and what is Death valley?" queried one. "Why, it is away out west in the mountains, and is a horrid hot place where people just wither up into mummies," was the reply. "How perfectly awful!" responded her friend. And then, with a tone of enthusiasm in her voice, she added, "But what a dear, sweet little mummy Fred would make!"-Iola Reg-
